“ This is way overdo, but as we're coming close to our first Christmas without you, I feel like it's time for me to speak (or type). I've never spent a Christmas without both of my grandparents before... the only ones I ever really knew. When I say that I knew you, I mean that I had spent a big portion of my life with you... a very big portion. A longer portion than I've lived without you, and I think that's a big reason why I took you for granted. You were there through every struggle.. heartache.. stressful situation that I had ever been through, and within a matter of weeks you were gone. God blessed me with the most amazing and supportive grandparents I could have had.. but now I selfishly wish our time together were longer. It's so unlike me to be awake at this hour... but my mind is stuck on you. I miss you guys. I miss my biggest fans. I miss y'all so much it hurts. I honestly feel like if I would have told you about little Rae sooner, you'd still be here but I know you're watching us. You're smiling down on us, and you will most definitely meet her one day. She'll meet the great grandparents that taught her grandma how to love so hard. She will know about you and papa.. I promise ❤️
